Stable level of activity

The enterprises in Norges Bank's Regional Network expect overall activity to remain virtually unchanged in the first half of 2024. Prospects have been revised up somewhat since the previous survey. At the same time, there are still wide differences across sectors. Contacts in oil services and services expect a rise in activity, while contacts in the other sectors expect a fall in activity. Both the share of contacts reporting full capacity utilisation and the share reporting labour shortages remain unchanged since the previous survey, after falling over the past two years. Contacts expect annual wage growth of 4.9% in 2024, which is an upward revision from the estimate in November. Contacts report weaker profitability in Q1 than at the same time in 2023.

Continued wide differences across sectors

Overall, contacts expect virtually unchanged activity through the first half of 2024 (Chart 1). There are unusually wide differences across sectors even though the dispersion has diminished somewhat since the previous survey (Chart 2). Contacts in oil services and services expect activity to increase ahead, while contacts in construction expect a substantial fall. In manufacturing and retail trade, contacts expect a decline in activity in Q1. In Q2, manufacturing contacts expect stable developments and retail trade contacts expect a less pronounced decline.

Substantial fall in new building activity

Contacts expect a considerable decline in construction in the first half of 2024, with the sharpest decline in residential and commercial construction. High construction costs and higher interest rates have led to weak profitability in many construction projects. At the same time, new home sales have been low. A number of contacts now report higher sales of new housing construction projects and expect this to lift housing construction towards the end of the year. Many projects are currently underway to renovate, convert and improve the energy-efficiency of buildings, compensating for some of the decline in new building activity. Large infrastructure projects are boosting output among a large share of construction contractors. Clearing up after extreme weather events has also boosted the number of orders among some enterprises. On the other hand, there are considerably fewer orders related to foundation work in new building construction.

Manufacturing contacts expect a decline in output in Q1, followed by stable developments in the period to summer. Manufacturers of building materials and consumer durables report the weakest developments, and many have already reduced output substantially. European manufacturing suppliers also report reduced output. Enterprises report lower demand from the agricultural industry in Norway and other countries, while demand from the fishing industry is rising. Increased defence budgets and substantial investment in energy transition are contributing to growth for a number of manufacturing enterprises. At the same time, some contacts point to the considerable risk and weak profitability of some renewable energy projects. This is why some contacts are switching instead to more profitable petroleum and gas projects.

In oil services, activity is at a high level and contacts expect activity growth through the first half of 2024. For the majority of oil service contacts, most production capacity has been utilised, leaving little scope for further growth, which dampens growth expectations ahead. The petroleum tax package in particular is pushing up activity on the Norwegian shelf. Both globally and on the Norwegian shelf, willingness to invest in oil and gas extraction remains substantial.

Increased demand for services

In commercial services, contacts have revised up activity growth expectations in Q1, with growth remaining solid in the period to summer. Since the previous survey, expectations have improved particularly in digitalisation, legal and strategic consulting and communication services. The fact that customers are hiring new employees instead of purchasing consultancy services is having a dampening effect on activity growth in consulting, and staffing agencies report the same trend. A number of contacts have higher order levels related to energy transition and carbon footprint reduction services. In the business sector, spending on conferences, travel and property management increased. On the other hand, demand for services related to construction and goods transport continued to fall.

Services contacts report stronger growth in household demand. Retail trade contacts also report improved prospects and expect activity to decline less than in the previous survey, with many contacts citing no further expected policy rate increases. A number of contacts also point out that a weak krone means that households spend a larger share of income on Norwegian goods and services rather than on imports. Moreover, some contacts report that the number of foreign customers has increased over the past year. In some parts of Norway, a cold and snow-abundant winter has boosted sales of goods and services, such as clothing, sports equipment and ski holidays. At the same time, demand for capital goods, such as cars, furniture and electrical goods is low. Customers are increasingly switching to the cheapest alternatives and some contacts report that sales to newly established households have fallen the most.

Contacts will invest less in 2024

Contacts as a whole are planning for a decline in investment volume between 2023 and 2024, in line with expectations in the previous survey. Furthermore, they expect investment to show little change in 2025. A number of contacts have already made substantial investments, while for many other contacts, investment ahead is being held back by high investment and financing costs. With the exception of manufacturing, all sectors expect a fall in investment in 2024. Manufacturing contacts with plans to invest in 2024 are investing in particular in energy recovery and measures to become more environmentally friendly. A few are also investing in capacity expansion.

Unchanged capacity utilisation

The share of contacts reporting full capacity utilisation reached a peak in 2022 Q1 and has declined thereafter. Since the previous survey, the share has remained unchanged (Charts 3 and 4). Since the beginning of 2021, contacts have been asked about capacity utilisation compared with what they perceive as normal for their enterprise. In the past two surveys, the number of contacts with lower-than-normal capacity utilisation was appreciably higher than the number of contacts with above-normal

- 2 Share of contacts citing shortage of labour as a constraint on production/sales. The question about labour is asked only of the enterprises reporting full capacity utilisation, but the series shows the share of all contacts included in the interview period.

capacity utilisation. This is consistent with the share of contacts with capacity constraints below the historical average. In construction, this share is at its lowest since end-2015, reflecting the decision made by many construction enterprises to maintain a large part of their workforce in anticipation of a renewed increase in orders. The share of contacts reporting difficulties in recruiting qualified labour is also unchanged since November. Labour shortages are substantial in a number of occupational categories such as certain types of engineers, electricians and mechanically skilled workers. Challenges in recruiting the right expertise appear to be most pronounced outside cities. Fewer candidates are willing to relocate to less urban areas and some have wage expectations that are too high. Employment plans for 2024 Q1 have been revised up slightly since the previous survey, and contacts now expect weak employment growth in Q1. Furthermore, contacts expect a slight rise in employment through spring.

Projections for annual wage growth in 2024 have been revised up in all sectors

Contacts expect annual wage growth of 4.9% in 2024 (Chart 5), which is an upward revision from the 4.5% estimate in November. Wage growth expectations for 2024 have been revised up in all sectors since the previous survey. Many contacts cite the fact that higher living costs are pushing up wage expectations. Oil services contacts have the highest wage growth expectations, at 5.3%, and a number of contacts point out that wage growth must be adjusted in line with competitors and that a weak krone is pushing up wage growth for foreign contract personnel. The estimate is lowest for construction, at 4.7%, followed closely by retail trade, at 4.8%. Construction contacts point out that the weakened profitability of the sector provides little room for wage growth, and that they are instead giving financial priority to maintaining a number of employees until activity picks up again. In this survey, contacts expect wage growth of 4.0% in 2025. A large share of contacts expect lower inflation ahead to dampen wage growth in 2025.

Chart 5 Annual wage growth

Chart 6 Overall profitability growth

Change in operating margin in the current quarter compared with the same period one year earlier. Percent

In this survey, contacts were asked about cost inflation in 2023 H2 and cost expectations for 2024 H1, adjusted for seasonal variations. Contacts responded that costs had increased through 2023 H2. Contacts expect costs to rise further through spring, albeit at a slower pace than in autumn 2023.

Reduced profitability

Profitability among contacts is weaker than a year ago (Chart 6). Developments in profitability reflect developments in activity across sectors and the extent to which enterprises have been able to cover the steep rise in costs. In construction and retail trade, many contacts point out lower turnover and capacity utilisation, and that the competitive situation makes it difficult to raise prices. Contacts in manufacturing overall also report reduced profitability, but there is considerable variation across enterprises. In services, profitability has improved owing to increased turnover, efficiency gains and improved cost control. In oil services, higher prices and increased order levels are boosting profitability.

Least favourable economic situation is still in regions East, Inland and Central

Contacts are asked, on a scale from -3 to +3, how they would rate the economic situation of their enterprise in terms of demand, profitability and prospects. A value of zero indicates a normal situation. The regional indicator is an average of the responses in the individual region. In this survey, the average for the seven regions is slightly positive. Regions Inland, Central and East are below zero. In this survey, the score is highest for region North, reflecting strong developments in fishing and tourism industries.
