National report

Minor changes in growth prospects

Norges Bank's Regional Network contacts expect moderate output growth through 2026 H2. Contacts point to improved household purchasing power, higher defence spending and data centre buildout as important growth drivers. At the same time, low construction activity is dampening growth. The share of network contacts reporting full capacity utilisation has been below its historical average over the past year, and in this survey, the share has fallen further. The share of contacts reporting difficulties recruiting qualified labour is also lower than the historical average and compared with the previous survey. Contacts estimate annual wage growth of 4.5% in 2026 and 4.0% in 2027.

Following a gradual pickup through 2025, the growth rate has been somewhat lower so far in 2026. Overall, Regional Network contacts expect output growth of 0.3% in both 2026 Q3 and Q4 (Charts 1 and 2). On the whole, contacts' growth expectations for Q3 are little changed from the previous survey. All sectors, with the exception of oil services, expect higher activity ahead.

Households pushing up growth

Household-oriented service contacts report solid activity in tourism. However, some contacts point to a reduced inflow of tourists from Asia. Events in connection with the football World Cup boosted turnover at the beginning of summer. Hotels, restaurants and amusement parks report high guest counts, and contacts in health, wellness and communication and media services also report higher demand. A number of contacts emphasise that tourism activity in Norway this summer may have also boosted retail trade growth. Some report that households have solid finances and are spending on consumer goods such as clothing, shoes, sporting goods and groceries. At the same time, some retail contacts point to prospects for higher interest rates to explain lower turnover growth in consumer durables. A majority of car dealers believe that new car sales will pick up towards the end of 2026, when new tax rules are expected to come into force, but that sales will nevertheless be weaker than in 2025.

Increased spending on defence and preparedness is boosting activity in commercial services. On the other hand, low construction activity has dampened order volumes among eg architects and technical consultants. The emergence of artificial intelligence (AI) is affecting consultancy firms unevenly. For some, the technology creates new business opportunities through AI consultancy and solution implementation services. For others, it reduces demand for certain services they supply as customers become increasingly self-reliant.

Upturn in residential construction delayed

Construction activity remains low, and there are few new residential and commercial construction projects. The exception is in region South-West, where residential construction is picking up. A number of contacts believe that residential construction has troughed, but many also report that the upturn keeps getting delayed. Contacts report fewer municipal construction projects, while there is an increase in state-level projects.

As in preceding surveys, more contacts expect data centre buildout and increased defence spending to lift activity.

After several years of rapid growth in export-oriented manufacturing, domestically oriented manufacturing has reported the strongest growth prospects so far in 2026. Data centre buildout is increasing demand for cables, transformers, switchboards and other energy supply equipment, which is boosting activity among a growing number of firms in the domestic market. A number of contacts point out that developments in the building materials industry are no longer dampening growth to the same extent. Continued increased spending on defence, security and preparedness is boosting activity among manufacturers in both domestic and export markets. At the same time, some exporters report strong international competition, particularly from Asian manufacturers. Aquaculture contacts expect increased output through autumn due to large fish volumes in sea pens and low mortality. Quota reductions continue to dampen activity in both wild capture fisheries and segments of the wider fishing industry.

Slightly improved outlook for oil services

The fall in activity among oil service contacts in the domestic market in H2 partly reflects few new major field developments. However, the fall is being dampened by maintenance, modifications and operations contracts on existing fields. A number of oil service contacts report strong growth in drilling and subsea activity on both the Norwegian continental shelf and in some export markets.

Accelerating investment growth

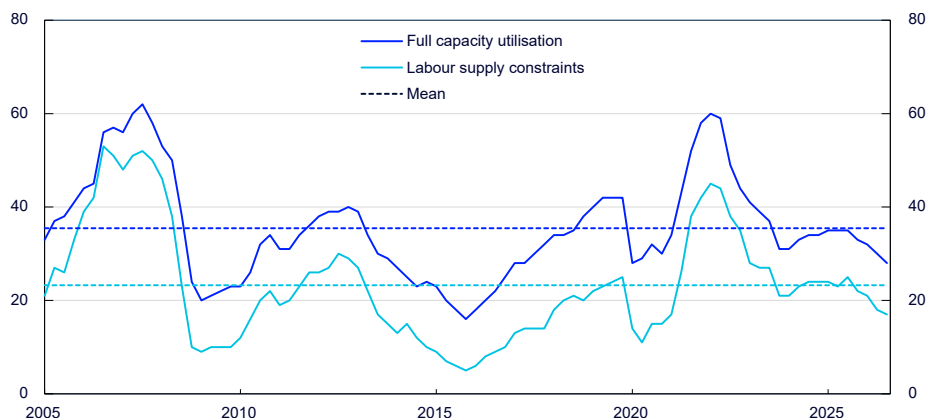

On the whole, firms plan to increase investment in 2026 and 2027. Datacentre buildout is pulling up investment among service contacts in 2026 and will contribute to accelerating growth in 2027. In addition, contacts report capacity expansion in tourism. Technology investment is pushing up investment across sectors. However, some contacts are choosing to postpone or cancel investment projects owing to uncertainty related to future profitability.

Somewhat lower capacity utilisation

In this survey, 28% of contacts report full capacity utilisation, while 17% report skilled labour shortages (Charts 3 and 4). Both indicators have gradually declined over the past year and are now below their historical averages. In all sectors, the indicators are lower than they were one year ago, but the decline has been most pronounced for oil services. Lower activity results in far fewer oil service contacts operating at full capacity. However, the greatest contribution to the overall decline in the indicators is made by the service contacts. This primarily reflects that many consultancy firms now reporting weaker competition for labour. However, a number point out that it is difficult to find experienced staff. There are also considerable regional differences in the labour market. Recruitment difficulties are most prevalent in region South-West, while only a few contacts report labour shortages in regions East and Central.

- 2 Share of contacts citing shortage of labour as a constraint on production/sales. The question about labour is asked only of the enterprises reporting full capacity utilisation, but the series shows the share of all contacts included in the interview period.

Chart 5 Total employment growth

Expected growth current quarter and next quarter. Seasonally adjusted. Percent

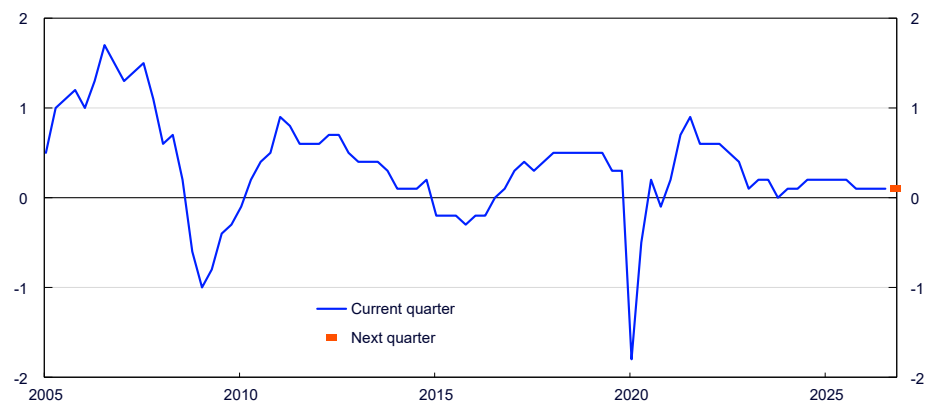

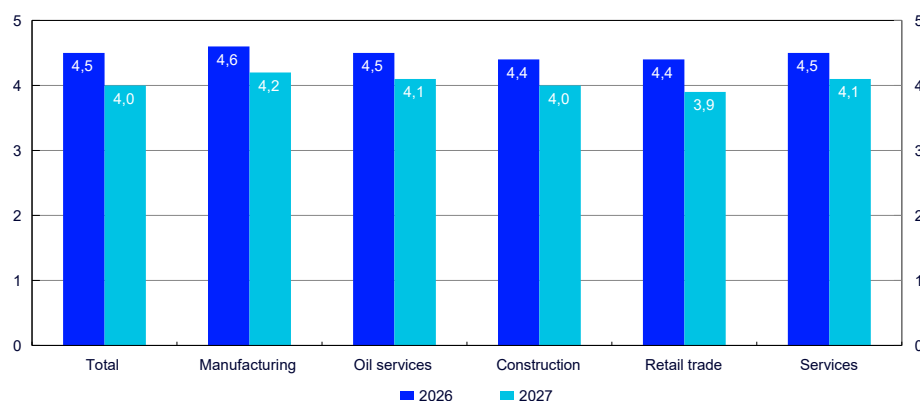

Chart 6 Annual wage growth

Expected annual wage growth. Percent

Overall, contacts expect employment to edge up through 2026 H2 (Chart 5). Oil service contacts expect lower activity to reduce staffing needs, while services and manufacturing contacts are planning for some growth and point in particular to a sharp staffing increase among defence suppliers. On the other hand, reduced recruitment among a number of consultancy firms is weighing on employment growth in services, and some report that increased use of AI dampens labour demand. In construction and retail trade, contacts are planning to keep headcounts flat through autumn. Construction contacts cite few new orders, while retail trade contacts largely point to spare capacity. Some contacts across industries report that efficiency measures are easing staffing needs.

Minor changes in annual wage growth estimates

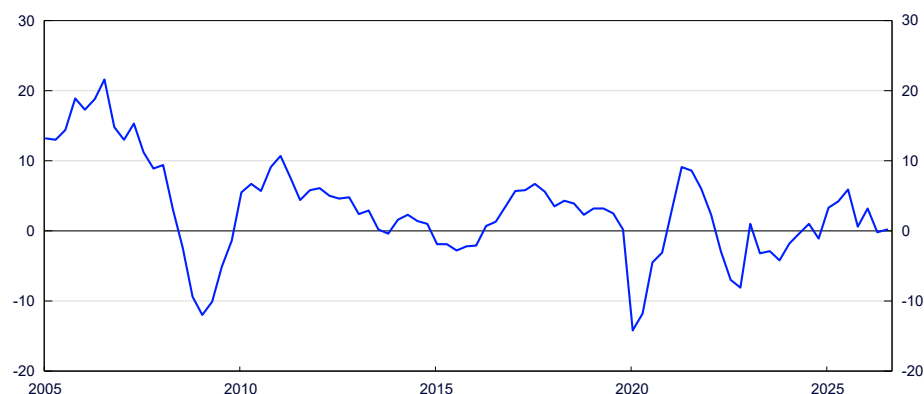

Contacts estimate wage growth at 4.5% in 2026 and 4.0% in 2027 (Chart 6). The estimate for 2026 is unchanged from the previous survey, while the estimate for 2027 has been revised down from 4.1%. A number of contacts, particularly in construction, report that they have not been able to compensate for wage growth by raising prices to any significant extent. However, these contacts highlight the difficulty of keeping wage growth below the norm for the wage settlement in manufacturing without losing important expertise. Most contacts expect wage growth to decline in 2027, but some highlight the risk of high inflation contributing to keeping wage growth elevated.

Virtually unchanged profitability

Overall, profitability in 2026 Q3 is little changed from 2025 Q3 (Chart 7). Profitability in construction remains weak, and competition for contracts is fierce. Nevertheless, somewhat higher activity is lifting the margins of some contacts. Moreover, the completion of unprofitable fixed-price contracts, entered into before construction costs increased sharply, has improved profitability for some contacts. Activity growth and higher prices are boosting profitability in domestically oriented manufacturing, while increased competition in global markets and a stronger krone are weighing on the export industry. Among oil service contacts, reduced capacity utilisation is eroding profitability. In retail trade and services, margins are little changed.

Chart 7 Overall profitability growth

The regional indicators show little change through summer

Contacts are asked, on a scale from -3 to +3, how they would rate the economic situation of their firm in terms of demand, profitability and prospects. A value of zero indicates a normal situation. The regional indicator is an average of the responses in the individual region. The indicators are little changed since the previous survey. Contacts in region South-West report the strongest economic situation, partly reflecting spillovers from high activity related to energy production that are improving business conditions for many of these contacts. The indicator is negative in only one region, Central, where weak demand for housing and conventional commercial buildings in particular is weighing on business conditions.
