National report

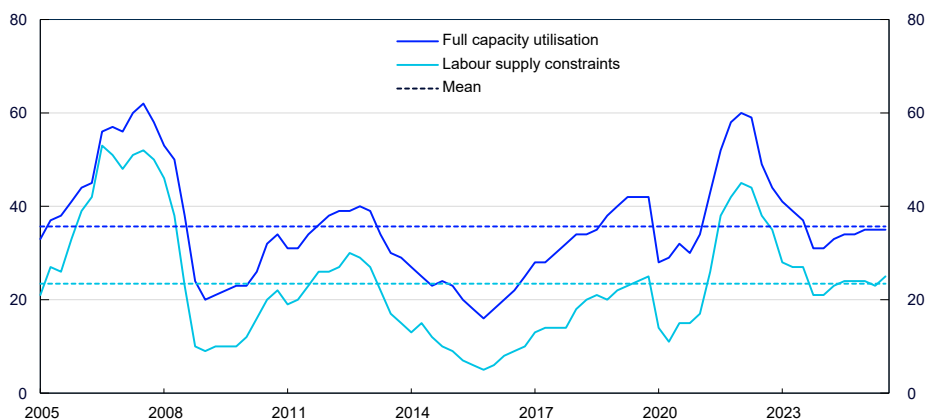

Stable growth prospects

The share of contacts in Norges Bank's Regional Network reporting full capacity utilisation is little changed from the previous surveys in 2025. At the same time, slightly more contacts are facing recruitment difficulties. Contacts expect output growth to remain elevated through 2025 H2, and many expect higher household purchasing power to strengthen demand for both goods and services. Moreover, some contacts expect growth in residential construction to boost activity. A number of contacts point out that there is still uncertainty related to international trade barriers and some cite greater customer caution. Contacts are planning to increase the number of employees in the course of autumn.

1 Share of contacts that will face some or considerable difficulty increasing output/sales without committing additional resources such as labour or machinery.

2 Share of contacts citing shortage of labour as a constraint on production/sales. The question about labour is asked only of the enterprises reporting full capacity utilisation, but the series shows the share of all contacts included in the interview period.

Chart 2 Capacity utilisation¹

Percentage shares

¹ Share of contacts that will face some or considerable difficulty increasing output/sales without committing additional resources such as labour or machinery

Capacity utilisation close to normal levels

In this survey, 35% of contacts report full capacity utilisation (Charts 1 and 2), which is the same level as in the previous surveys in 2025 and just below the historical average for this indicator. Contacts are also asked about their capacity utilisation relative to a normal level. The share responding that their levels are higher than normal is broadly equal to the share responding that levels are lower than normal. Recruitment difficulties are the primary constraint on output across sectors, reported by 25% of contacts. This is the highest share in two years, slightly higher than the average for this indicator.

Output growth remains elevated

Overall, network contacts expect output growth to remain fairly stable in the period between 2025 Q3 and Q4 (Charts 3 and 4). Contacts' overall growth expectations for Q3 are little changed from the previous survey. Construction and retail trade contacts expect growth to pick up somewhat through H2, although many point out that activity levels are low. On the other hand, growth is slowing and activity is high for most oil services contacts.

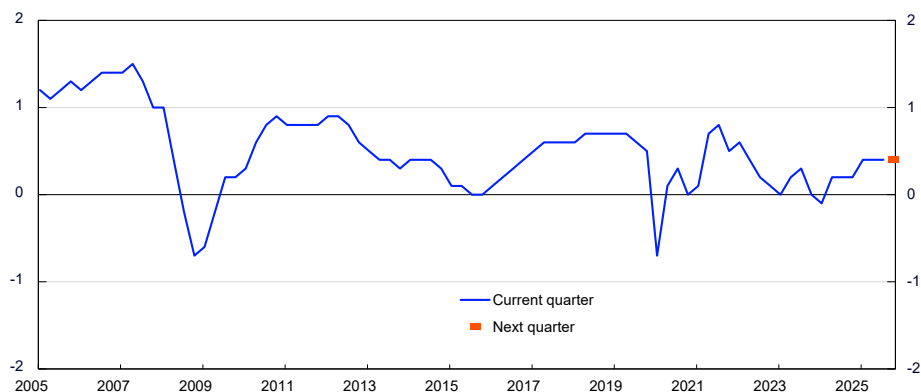

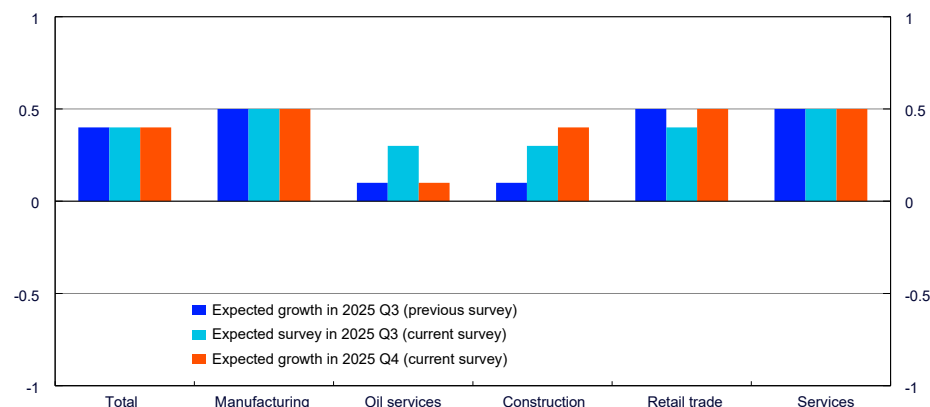

Chart 4 Output growth. All sectors

Slight improvement in construction prospects

In the June survey, construction contacts expected activity levels to increase modestly in the period to autumn after having reported declining activity since the beginning of 2023. In this survey, construction contacts have revised up their expectations for 2025 Q3 and envisage slightly faster growth in Q4. Some housing construction contacts will launch more projects in autumn, particularly in the cities. A number of contacts also report increasing activity in government-funded construction projects, while local government order volumes remain low. Some contacts expect that lower interest rates will lead to stronger appetite for investment in private commercial buildings somewhat further ahead, but at present few have received new orders in this segment.

Aquaculture sector pushes up exports

Manufacturing contacts expect growth to remain elevated through 2025 H2 and that the largest rise will be in export markets. Improved fish health has provided a solid boost to aquaculture output in H1 and contacts expect further growth to the end of 2025. Higher output and ample investment appetite in aquaculture is also driving growth among suppliers. At the same time, lower quotas are leading to a downturn in fisheries, which also reduces activity in fish processing.

Among contacts that export directly to the US, some report concern that they will lose market shares to competitors in countries subject to lower tariffs. However, a number of contacts expect that the tariffs will primarily lead to changes in the flow of goods. For example, aquaculture contacts point out that a larger share of farmed fish from Chile and Canada will go to US markets, while more Norwegian fish will be directed towards European and Asian markets. Such changes in the flow of goods may curb the rise in export prices for Norwegian fish ahead. Whether or not contacts export to the US directly, some are concerned about the negative effects of trade conflicts, such as lower global growth, disruptions in the flow of goods and uncertain price developments. Some suppliers to European manufacturers report weaker demand and link this to an increased supply of Asian products in the European market.

Manufacturers also report that increased global and domestic defence spending is boosting activity. The energy transition continues to drive growth and create jobs in large offshore wind and power sector projects. At the same time, a number of contacts report few new orders in renewables, particularly from Norwegian and US customers.

Oil services expect a slight rise in activity through 2025 H2, primarily in export markets. Several contacts expect construction activity on the Norwegian continental shelf to fall this winter, in pace with the completion of projects initiated when tax changes were made for the oil industry.

Uncertainty dampens growth in commercial services

Commercial services contacts expect broadly unchanged growth in 2025 Q3 and Q4. As in the June survey, many contacts emphasise global uncertainty and point out that customers are cautious. A number also point to lower demand for services related to climate transition, while maritime and defence sector demand is picking up. At the same time, some consulting firms report rising demand for services related to security and contingency preparedness. Some firms report that customers need assistance to adopt artificial intelligence. At the same time, some see signs that customers are using artificial intelligence to perform tasks they previously outsourced. Contacts that provide CRE-related services, such as architects, technical advisors and recruitment agencies, still report weak demand, although some have recently seen an increase in new orders.

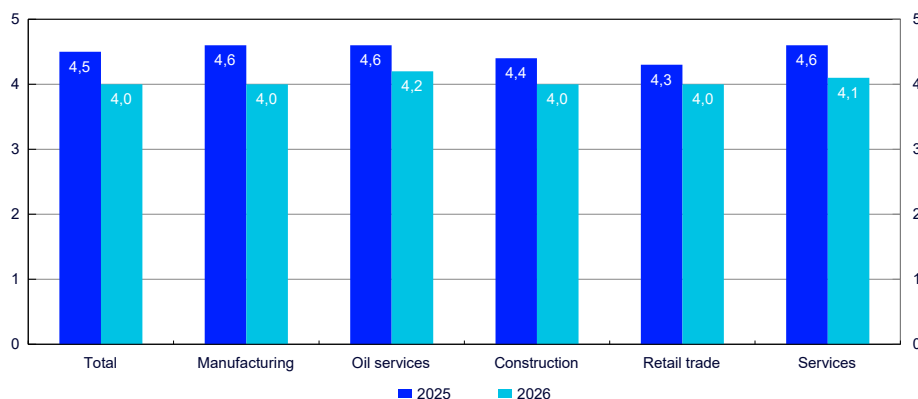

Higher household demand

In household services, growth continues to be underpinned by the sharp rise in tourism. Hotels, restaurants, transport firms and tourist attractions report solid summer guest numbers and expect growth to remain firm through autumn. While foreign tourists continue to be the primary contributors to growth, some contacts expect a rise in the number of domestic guests to generate growth through autumn.

Retail trade contacts expect growth to remain elevated through 2025 H2. Some point out that while high summer temperatures have resulted in fewer visitors to shopping centres, they have also contributed to higher sales for seasonal goods such as clothing, shoes and sporting goods. Contacts expect sales in durable consumer goods, such as cars, furniture and electronics, to increase through autumn. In particular, they point to generous wage settlements and lower expected interest rates.

Chart 5 Annual wage growth

Expected annual wage growth. Percent

Slightly higher employment

Overall, contacts are planning for a slight increase in employment to the end of the year, mainly in manufacturing and services. Some service contacts also report that the introduction of artificial intelligence increases the need for technical expertise in the short term, but that AI will dampen the need for labour further ahead. Oil services contacts expect to increase their workforces somewhat in 2025 Q3 but are not planning any further increases. In the longer term, they expect to scale down output and workforces as they complete a number of large projects. Contacts expect output growth to outpace employment growth ahead. This primarily reflects higher expected output growth in retail trade and construction, where spare capacity is also ample, which reduces the need to increase workforces. Retail trade contacts plan to keep workforces stable to the end of the year and expect to meet increased demand with their current workforces. Construction contacts plan no changes in Q3, but assume a slight increase in workforces in Q4 as more residential construction projects are launched.

Unchanged annual wage growth projections

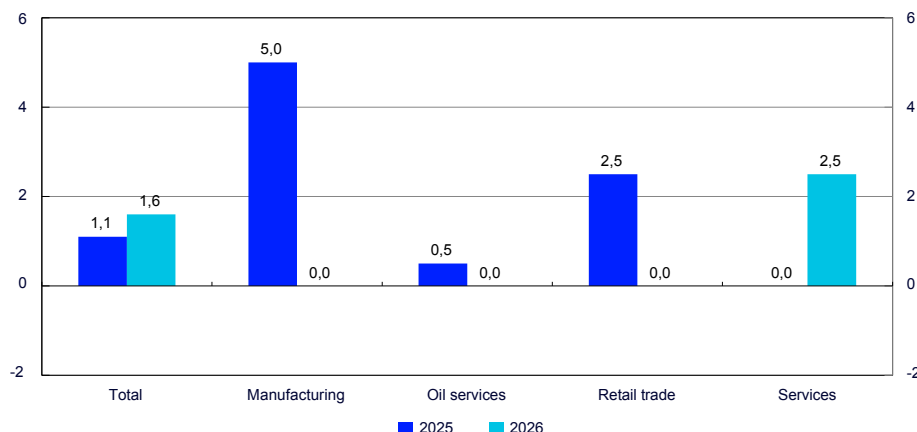

Contacts expect annual wage growth of 4.5% in 2025 and 4.0% in 2026 (Chart 5), in line with projections from the previous survey. For the 2025 projection, a large share of contacts cite the wage norm. Several sectors expect high wage growth in 2025 owing to solid profitability and strong competition for labour. Retail trade contacts have the lowest projections for 2025, reflecting low sales volumes and an ample supply of labour.

Increased investment in 2025

Contacts expect somewhat higher investment in 2025 than in 2024 and growth to remain firm in 2026 (Chart 6). Investment growth is broad-based across sectors. Manufacturing is being boosted in particular by investment related to increased aquaculture sector capacity and deliveries to the military. Many contacts also report increased investment in new technology and more efficient production methods. Retail trade

Chart 6 Investment growth

Expected investment growth. Percent contacts have long reported a lag in investment, particularly related to maintenance, which they are now carrying out. They report no change in investment for 2026. Services contacts are investing in digitalisation and technological solutions to automate more tasks. In addition, some contacts are planning investment in new buildings to increase capacity, particularly in tourism. In 2026, more services contacts plan to increase investment in new commercial buildings from levels that have long remained low.

Somewhat improved profitability

Overall profitability among contacts is stronger than a year ago (Chart 7). Construction contacts report a slight increase for the first time since end-2018, although many point out that profitability is weak. Despite lower activity, cost-cutting measures, such as reducing both permanent and contract personnel, have prevented further margin decline among a number of contacts. In the other sectors, contacts also report improved margins.

Chart 7 Overall profitability growth

Substantial improvement in the economic situation in regions Inland and Central

Regional Network

Contacts are asked, on a scale from -3 to +3, how they would rate the economic situation of their enterprise in terms of demand, profitability and prospects. A value of zero indicates a normal situation. The regional indicator is an average of the responses in the individual region. In this survey, all regional indicators are positive, with the exception of a neutral indicator for region East. As in previous surveys, the economic situation is most favourable for contacts in region South-West, but improvement from the June survey is strongest in region Inland, where activity is boosted by defence spending and tourism. Region Central is also showing clear improvement, with contacts also citing defence and tourism. Strong output growth in aquaculture is also strengthening the economic situation in the region.
