National report

Recruitment difficulties have eased somewhat

Among Norges Bank's Regional Network contacts, slightly fewer report capacity constraints, and the share facing recruitment difficulties has declined somewhat since the previous survey. Contacts have revised down their growth expectations for 2026 Q2 but expect growth to pick up again somewhat in Q3. Many contacts point out that customers have become more hesitant owing to prospects for higher interest rates and stronger cost growth ahead. At the same time, data centre buildout, energy supply development and increased defence investment are improving prospects for some contacts. Contacts estimate annual wage growth of 4.5% in 2026 and 4.1% in 2027.

In this survey, 30% of contacts report full capacity utilisation (Charts 1 and 2). This indicator has gradually moved down in recent surveys and is now

1 Share of contacts that will face some or considerable difficulty increasing output/sales without committing additional resources such as labour or machinery.

2 Share of contacts citing shortage of labour as a constraint on production/sales. The question about labour is asked only of the enterprises reporting full capacity utilisation, but the series shows the share of all contacts included in the interview period.

at its lowest level since end-2020. In addition, more contacts report that recruitment difficulties have eased somewhat. Fewer contacts face difficulties recruiting IT expertise, and some report that digital solutions have reduced the need for employees somewhat. At the same time, contacts report difficulty recruiting project managers and skilled workers, such as machine operators, carpenters, electricians, chefs and drivers. On the whole, contacts expect a slight rise in employment in both Q2 and Q3 (Chart 3).

Higher annual wage growth estimates

Contacts have revised up their annual wage growth estimates to 4.5% for 2026 and 4.1% for 2027 (Chart 4). The dispersion of estimates for both 2026 and 2027 is narrow across sectors in this survey. For 2026, a large share of contacts refer to the wage norm in manufacturing. Oil services contacts have the highest estimate for 2026, followed by services contacts. Some contacts point out that inflation and policy rate developments will affect wage growth in 2027.

Slightly weaker growth

Contacts have revised down their growth expectations in 2026 Q2 but expect growth to pick up somewhat in Q3 (Charts 5 and 6). All sectors with the exception of oil services expect higher activity ahead.

Further growth in tourism

In household services, contacts expect further growth in tourism, and many cite that Norway is widely perceived as a safe tourist destination. At the same time, many contacts believe the stronger krone will dampen growth. Some contacts report cancellations from Asian tourists as a result of cancelled flights, and some hotels report that the recent strike has dampened growth in Q2. Retail trade contacts report a pickup in growth from Q1 to Q2. A majority of car dealers point out that new car sales are increasing in Q2 following an extraordinarily weak Q1. However, some contacts believe prospects for a higher policy rate are dampening sales of consumer durables. A number of retail trade contacts point out that customers are trading down to lower-cost alternatives, but a number believe that a higher number of tourists in Norway will boost retail trade this summer.

Increased investment in defence and emergency preparedness is boosting activity in commercial services. Some services contacts also report higher order volumes related to energy supply and data centres. At the same time, many contacts report that global turbulence, cost growth and higher interest rates have made customers more hesitant and halted or postponed projects or orders. This applies to several sectors, such as technology, strategic advisory services, marketing and sale and development of real estate. Some consultancy firms also report that the emergence of artificial intelligence is reducing customers' need for their services.

Weaker new-build expectations

A low number of new-builds, both commercial and residential, continues to dampen construction sector growth. Contacts report that a pickup in residential construction is continually being postponed. They mainly point to higher interest rates and expectations of a further rise in building costs. As in preceding surveys, a number of contacts expect that energy development and data centre buildout, higher defence investment and residential construction in the southwest of Norway will contribute to some growth.

Low construction activity is also dampening growth among manufacturing contacts. Contacts also report that the closure of the Strait of Hormuz and trade barriers are leading to transport issues, higher costs and hesitant customers. Some contacts point out that stronger competition from Asian manufacturers is dampening expectations. At the same time, manufacturing contacts continue to report that increased investment in defence and emergency preparedness is boosting activity. In addition, some contacts report growth related to renewable energy development and data centre buildout. Contacts in the seafood industry report higher aquaculture output, while lower quotas are dampening activity in both fisheries and the fish processing industry.

Chart 7 Overall profitability growth

Change in operating margin in the current quarter compared with the same period one year earlier. Percent

Slight improvement in prospects among oil services contacts

As in preceding surveys, the phasing out of the petroleum tax package is dampening activity in oil services, and contacts report few new field development projects. However, many contacts report higher activity in connection with operations, maintenance and modifications, and that oil companies prioritise measures to extend the life of existing fields. A number point to stronger investment appetite for oil and gas projects but believe that this will have little effect on their activity in the near term.

Unchanged profitability

Overall, profitability among contacts is little changed compared with 2025 Q2 (Chart 7). Somewhat higher activity and better cost control are contributing to a modest improvement in profitability in construction. However, a number of contacts point out that sector profitability remains weak. In oil services, softer activity is reducing profitability, while contacts in the other sectors report little change in margins. Manufacturing and retail trade contacts report that while transport and commodity costs have increased, they have been largely offset by increased prices and higher activity.

Increasing investment in most sectors

Overall, contacts are planning to increase investment slightly in 2026 and 2027. After having invested heavily in capacity expansion in recent years, oil services contacts are planning to reduce investment in 2026. The other sectors are expecting to increase investment in 2026 compared with 2025. Technology investment is boosting investment across sectors. In addition, higher energy prices incentivise investment in energy efficiency, particularly among manufacturing contacts. On the other hand, global turbulence, cost growth and higher interest rates are prompting some contacts to postpone or halt investment projects.

The economic situation has weakened slightly in most regions

Contacts are asked, on a scale from -3 to +3, how they would rate the economic situation of their enterprise in terms of demand, profitability and prospects. A value of zero indicates a normal situation. The regional indicator is an average of the responses in the individual region.

Compared with the previous survey, regional indicators are lower in all regions, with the exception of region North-West, where maritime sector activity is robust. At the same time, the indicator is only negative in regions Inland and Central in this survey. Low construction activity pulls down indicators in most regions. Contacts in regions South-West and South report the most favourable economic conditions, supported in particular by data centre buildout and activities related to the defence sector.
