National report

Prospects for a decline in activity

The enterprises in Norges Bank's Regional Network expect overall activity to remain unchanged in 2023 Q4 and to fall in 2024 Q1. At the same time, there are wide differences across industries. Oil services contacts indicate a pronounced increase in activity, while contacts in the construction industry expect a substantial fall. Enterprises report more spare capacity and fewer recruitment difficulties. The share of contacts reporting full capacity utilisation and the share reporting labour shortages are now below their historical averages. Contacts expect annual wage growth of 5.4% in 2023 and 4.5% in 2024. Contacts report weaker profitability in Q4 than at the same time in 2022.

Wide differences across sectors

In this survey, contacts report that the activity level will show little change in the period between 2023 Q3 and Q4 (Chart 1). This is weaker than the expectations in the previous survey. The decline in construction and retail trade is accelerating, while growth in services has slowed (Chart 2). On the other hand, growth in oil services remains solid. Overall, contacts expect lower activity in the new year. All sectors expect weaker developments.

New building activity is falling sharply

The decline in construction is expected to deepen through winter, with the sharpest decline in residential and commercial construction. Over the past year and a half, contacts in this segment have reported lower order intakes. Initially, construction costs were the primary reason why building developers postponed construction projects. Now, contacts mainly associate the decline with higher interest rates and weaker cyclical developments. However, building renovation activity is solid, which includes many current projects to improve the energy-efficiency of buildings. Moreover, some contacts also cite the need to modify office premises in line with new post-pandemic working habits. In infrastructure and transport, activity remains stable at a high level.

Overall, manufacturing contacts expect output volumes to show little change in the period between 2023 Q3 and Q4, but to fall somewhat in Q1. Prospects are better for export markets than for the domestic market. This primarily depends on the product group being exported rather than on expectations of stronger cyclical developments abroad than in Norway. Manufacturing activity is being dampened by lower demand for building materials and capital goods. Some contacts also point to reduced demand from European manufacturers. On the other hand, there is still solid growth in demand for products related to electricity production, energy transition and other climate mitigation measures. Moreover, defence industry activity is high. Fishing and aquaculture suppliers report solid growth related to operations and maintenance, but several point out that there is still little willingness to invest among aquaculture firms.

Solid growth in oil services

Energy prices are high and willingness to invest in oil and gas extraction is substantial. The petroleum tax package provides a substantial boost to activity related to new construction and further field development on the Norwegian continental shelf. Contacts expect activity to increase further in 2024 Q1. The willingness to invest reflects the high activity level in oil services, where activity growth remains solid, albeit slower.

Cost-conscious customers

Activity among commercial services is increasing slightly from 2023 Q3, albeit at a slower pace. The fall in construction and retail trade is also curbing activity growth in services, with activity also declining among employment agencies, architects and goods transport. Contacts that have reported solid growth over a longer period now report weaker growth, for example in the areas of legal and strategic consulting and information technology. There is still significant growth in demand for services related to sustainability and energy transition. In the business sector, employee activities and travel are being prioritised by enterprises but in a more cost-conscious manner.

Growth in household services is also slowing from the previous survey. Despite tighter finances, households are prioritising travel and experiences but some contacts expect lower purchasing power and higher interest expenses to dampen growth ahead. On the other hand, some contacts expect that a weak krone will mean that fewer households will holiday abroad and will make greater use of services in Norway. Retail trade contacts, however, have reported reduced sales volumes since the beginning of 2022 and expect a decline in volume again in this survey. Over a period, customers have shifted towards cheaper alternatives in several retail trade segments. In the grocery trade sector, households choose both cheaper product categories and brands. Car dealerships report that more people are choosing to keep their cars longer and repair them, rather than buy a new one. Contacts expect tighter household finances to lead to a sharper fall in sales volumes in 2024 Q1.

Enterprises will invest less in 2024

Overall, contacts expect a slight increase in investment volume between 2022 and 2023. At the same time, they expect investment to fall somewhat in 2024, and prospects are little changed since the previous survey. Manufacturing and oil services contacts plan to increase investment in 2024, whereas services and retail trade contacts will reduce investment. Owing to weaker demand and higher interest rates, some contacts have put planned investments on hold. Moreover, some have postponed investments in anticipation of a fall in capital goods prices. At the same time, many investments have already been initiated, which is helping to cushion the fall in investment. Contacts are investing in particular in automation, energy reduction and climate mitigation measures.

Lower capacity utilisation

The share of contacts with full capacity utilisation has declined in most sectors (Charts 3 and 4). The share is still lowest in retail trade and construction, but it is in services that the share has fallen the most since the previous survey. A number of contacts report that they have scaled up production to meet higher activity levels, but that demand has increased less than expected. As a result of high turnover and many new hires in the wake of the pandemic, some contacts now have a large share of new employees who require training, which is weighing down on productivity. Since August, fewer contacts report difficulties in recruiting qualified labour. At the same time, some contacts report that a weak krone makes it more difficult to recruit foreign labour. For the first time since the beginning of 2021, both the indicator for capacity constraints and the indicator for labour shortages are below their historical averages.

Contacts expect employment to fall in 2024 Q1

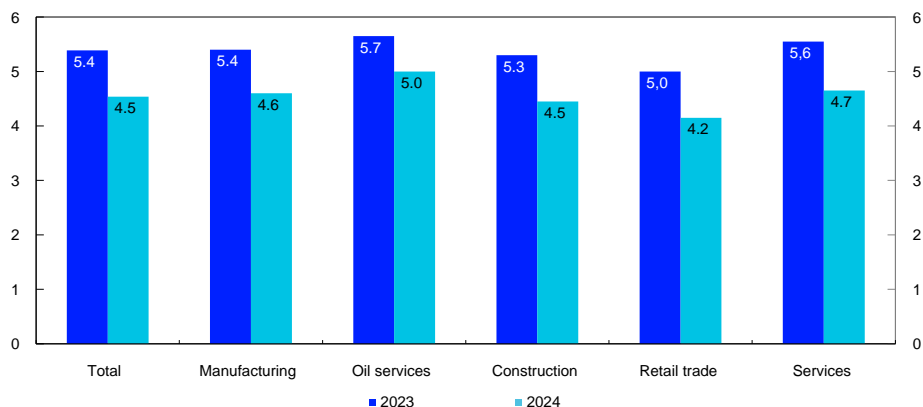

Employment plans for 2023 Q4 have been revised down since the previous survey, and contacts now expect fairly stable employment in Q4. Further, contacts report that employment will fall slightly in 2024 Q1. Oil services contacts are still planning to increase staffing substantially, while services contacts expect weak employment growth. A number of contacts, which have had high employee turnover in recent years, report that fewer employees than expected have terminated employment contracts in the course of autumn. As a result, the level of employment is now higher than planned. In the other sectors, contacts report that they will reduce employment owing to lower demand. Retail trade and construction contacts report a steeper decline in activity than in employment through 2023, and they also expect the same trend in 2024 Q1. One of the reasons why retail trade contacts do not reduce employment further is the minimum staffing required to cover the opening hours of shops. In construction, contacts expect large-scale downsizing to lead to recruitment difficulties and labour shortages when demand picks up again.

The estimates for annual wage growth are little changed

Contacts expect annual wage growth of 5.4% in 2023 (Chart 5), unchanged from the estimate in the previous survey. Contacts expect ample labour supply and weaker economic prospects to dampen wage growth in 2024. In this survey, they expect wage growth of 4.5% in 2024, which is a slight downward revision from the 4.6% estimate in August. However, a majority of contacts expect that inflation will continue to be important for wage growth in 2024. The differences between the sectors' wage growth expectations for 2024 have widened through 2023. Retail trade contacts have the lowest estimate, at 4.2%, while oil services contacts have the highest expectations at 5%.

Chart 6 Overall profitability growth

Reduced profitability

Profitability among contacts is weaker than a year ago (Chart 6). The decline is broadly based. Contacts have managed to cover the steep rise in costs over the past year to varying degrees by raising prices. Among construction and retail trade contacts, many point to lower turnover. In services, a number of contacts explain that the decline is due to stronger growth in employment than in turnover. In manufacturing, contacts as a whole report somewhat reduced profitability, but there is considerable variation among contacts. A weaker krone exchange rate is improving margins in the export industry, but a number of contacts also point to lower selling prices in local currency. At the same time, profitability is being dampened by a fall in turnover volume in many segments of the building materials industry. In oil services, higher prices and higher order levels are boosting profitability.

Least favourable economic situation in regions East, Inland and Central

Beginning with the first survey of 2023, contacts are asked, on a scale from -3 to +3, how they would rate the economic situation of their enterprise in terms of demand, profitability and prospects. A value of zero indicates a normal situation. The regional indicator is an average of the responses in the individual region. In this survey, only the regional indicators in regions South-West and South are above zero, while the responses are most negative in regions Central, Inland and East. Since the previous survey, scores have fallen in most regions, and the average of the seven regional indicators is negative for the first time. The decline in the regional indicators reflects lower growth expectations in most sectors.
