National report

Increased exports despite international trade uncertainty

Regional Network contacts expect growth to remain firm in 2025 Q2 and Q3. International trade barriers are increasing uncertainty, but only a few contacts expect that this will lead to lower growth in the period to autumn. Increased defence investment and higher aquaculture output are boosting growth. Contacts also expect higher sales of durable goods and further growth in tourism. Moreover, a number of construction contacts expect residential construction to pick up somewhat through autumn. The share of contacts reporting capacity constraints is little changed from the previous survey, while the share reporting labour shortages is slightly lower. Contacts expect annual wage growth of 4.5% in 2025 and 4.0% in 2026.

In the previous survey, contacts reported substantial international trade policy uncertainty. Trade tensions have intensified since the interviews in winter, but do not appear to have dampened growth expectations as contacts now expect growth to remain firm through 2025 Q2 and Q3 (Charts 1 and 2). For Q2, export industry contacts and oil service exporters expect the strongest growth while contacts in construction expect the weakest developments and account for the only sector that expects negative growth. For Q3 however, construction contacts expect growth to pick up slightly, while domestically-oriented oil services expect somewhat lower output.

Increased exports boosting growth

Manufacturing contacts expect growth in 2025 Q2 to be the strongest since end-2021. The highest growth is expected in the export market. In aquaculture, favourable biological conditions are providing a substantial

Effects of higher barriers to trade

In this survey, contacts were asked some additional questions about adjustments to and consequences of higher trade barriers. Few contacts expect tariff barriers to dampen their own exports in 2025 Q2 and Q3, primarily reflecting low exports to the US and the ability of goods exporters to largely shift to other markets. At the same time, a number of contacts point out that a European market decline would have a far greater impact, although few expect this to curb growth in Q2 and Q3. Some contacts that purchase foreign goods report that although trade barriers can shift the flow of goods, they will primarily drive up the cost of goods and freight rates with limited impact on activity. So far, mainly service contacts expect heightened global uncertainty to weigh down on activity growth.

Contacts were asked whether they had adjusted their investment plans for 2025 or 2026 in response to the higher trade barriers. A large majority of contacts responded that they had not changed their plans, and only a few responded that downward adjustments had been made. Among the contacts that did make downward adjustments, most had initially planned for relatively small investments in 2025 and 2026. Very few contacts responded that they had made upward adjustments. Contacts were also asked whether they had adjusted their planned selling prices for the next twelve months in response to the trade tensions. Here too, the majority responded that plans had not been adjusted, but the impact appears to be more pronounced on prices than on investment. Just less than one in ten contacts have made upward adjustments to their planned selling prices, with the highest share by far in construction.

boost to output in Q2. Higher output and investment appetite in aquaculture are also boosting order volumes in the service sector. At the same time, lower quotas are leading to a decline in deep-sea fishing, which also reduces the activity levels of fish processors.

Manufacturing contacts report that increased defence spending, both domestically and abroad, boosts activity, but some point out that it will take time for rising defence investment to have a substantial impact on production. The energy transition is still driving growth and creating more jobs in large offshore wind and electricity supply projects. At the same time, a number of contacts report few new orders in renewables, in particular from Norwegian customers. Contacts point to low profitability in these projects and some emphasise lacking clarification regarding subsidy schemes.

Building materials output has fallen considerably in recent years. In this survey, only a few contacts expect further decline, and some expect a rise in autumn. On the other hand, some contacts are concerned that further price rises, on for example timber, will nevertheless dampen demand ahead.

Oil service exporters point to continued global activity growth. Many large projects are underway in for example Brazil and West Africa. Some exports are also to the US, but since these are largely services, they are not affected by the tariffs.

Oil service contacts serving the domestic market expect activity to decline in the period between 2025 Q2 and Q3. Shipyards in particular have undergone a period of very high activity and expect a gradual return to normal levels ahead. This reflects the completion of projects initiated when tax changes were made for the oil industry, which expire this year. Contacts expect few new and large-scale projects ahead but increased activity related to service and maintenance.

Slightly weaker growth in services

Business service providers have lowered their expectations for 2025 Q2 somewhat. A number of contacts report that customers have become more hesitant and cite increased international uncertainty. In addition, growth impulses from the energy transition have weakened, partly as a result of announced amendments to the EU's Emissions Trading Directive. A number of contacts also point to fewer new offshore wind projects. IT services contacts continue to report growth as a result of increased digitalisation in the private and public sectors. Some service providers also report strong growth in demand from the Norwegian Armed Forces.

Growth among household-oriented service providers is held firm by the sharp rise in the tourism industry. Hotels report high occupancy rates due to many foreign tourists, and the majority expects further growth this summer. Increased tourism also has spillover effects for other parts of the services sector, including higher activity for food, transport and cleaning services. In addition to tourism, contacts report growth in services such as health and wellness and communication and media.

Households buy more consumer durables

Retail trade contacts expect higher sales in 2025 Q2 and Q3. The largest contributor is increased sales of consumer durables such as cars and furniture. Demand for these products has been low since the end of 2022, but contacts also reported improved sales in the previous survey. In addition, contacts that sell consumer goods such as clothing, shoes, food and medicine expect higher sales.

Construction set to stabilise this autumn

Construction contacts still have the weakest expectations and expect output to continue to decline in 2025 Q2. However, they expect to reach a low point in Q3. A number of housing construction contacts report that new home sales have improved, resulting in plans to launch more projects over the course of Q3. Some contacts that entered into the projects early expect higher activity. For many contacts, however, it will take time for the increased number of housing starts to generate growth. Activity remains low in commercial real estate, and contacts do not expect activity to pick up in 2025.

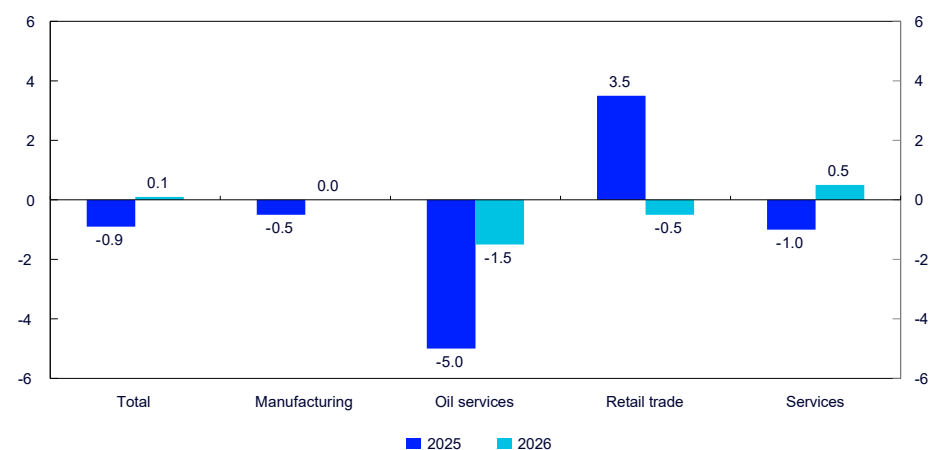

Looking ahead, there will be more defence-related construction projects but contacts point out that it will take time for these projects to lift activity. A number of contacts report higher order volumes from the public sector but emphasise that competition for these orders is also stronger. At the same time, increased demand from manufacturing, in particular maritime industries, lifts activity levels for some contacts.

Decline in investment in 2025

Contacts expect lower investment in 2025 than in 2024 and fairly stable investment in 2026 (Chart 3). Retail trade enterprises overall is the only sector to plan an increase in investment in 2025. Many retail enterprises have invested little in recent years, and a number of contacts report that they will in 2025 make some of the investments that were previously

Chart 3 Investment growth

Expected investment growth. Percent postponed. They expect investment levels to decline somewhat again next year. Among service providers, investment in new commercial real estate in particular contributes to the decline in investment in 2025. Continued high investment costs cause many service providers to postpone investments. Service providers are alone in expecting investment to increase in 2025. For the first time since autumn 2020, manufacturers expect lower investment in the current year, due to many large investment projects now entering their final phase or recently having reached completion. Measures to lower greenhouse gas emissions and automation are still creating growth among some contacts, and some are also investing in higher production capacity, mainly in connection with existing production facilities.

Some easing of labour market pressures

In this survey, 35% of contacts report that they would not be able to boost activity without hiring or increasing production capacity in other ways (Charts 4 and 5). This percentage is unchanged since the previous survey. At the same time, 23% of contacts, slightly fewer than in the previous survey, report difficulties in recruiting the qualified labour they need to boost activity. Although capacity constraints continue to be most widespread in oil services, they have decreased since 2025 Q1 owing to freed-up resources from the completion of a number of large projects. In services, fewer contacts also report capacity constraints, and some consultancy firms report weaker competition for labour. In construction and retail trade, the percentage of contacts reporting capacity constraints has increased since the previous survey. In construction, the percentage reached its highest level in the past two years, while the percentage in retail trade is the highest since the end of 2022. In retail trade, most contacts report no recruitment difficulties, while in construction, difficulties have increased.

Chart 5 Capacity utilisation¹

Contacts are planning to increase employment in both 2025 Q2 and Q3. Construction contacts expect employment to fall slightly in Q2. In Q3, however, they are planning to increase workforces for the first time in almost three years, reflecting the higher number of contacts expecting activity to rise towards the end of 2025.

Slightly higher projections for annual wage growth

Contacts expect annual wage growth of 4.5% in 2025 and 4.0% in 2026 (Chart 6). Both projections are somewhat higher compared with the previous survey. For the 2025 projection, a large share of contacts cite the wage norm. Oil services contacts expect the highest wage growth in 2025, partly owing to solid profitability and strong competition for labour. Construction contacts have one of the lowest projections for annual wage growth for 2025, reflecting low order volumes and weak profitability. At the same time, their projections are among the highest for 2026.

Chart 6 Annual wage growth

Expected annual wage growth. Percent.

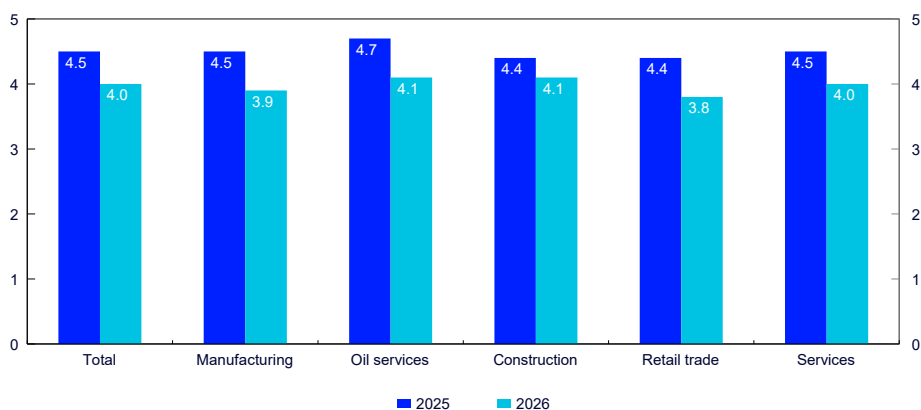

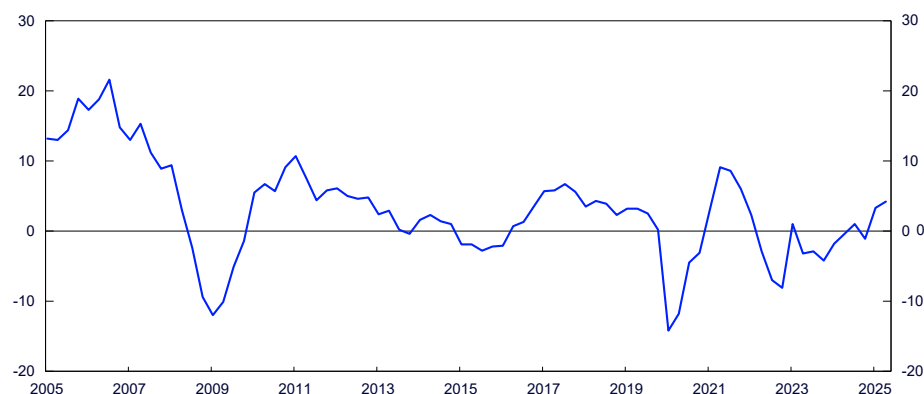

Chart 7 Overall profitability growth

Change in operating margin in the current quarter compared with the same period one year earlier. Percent

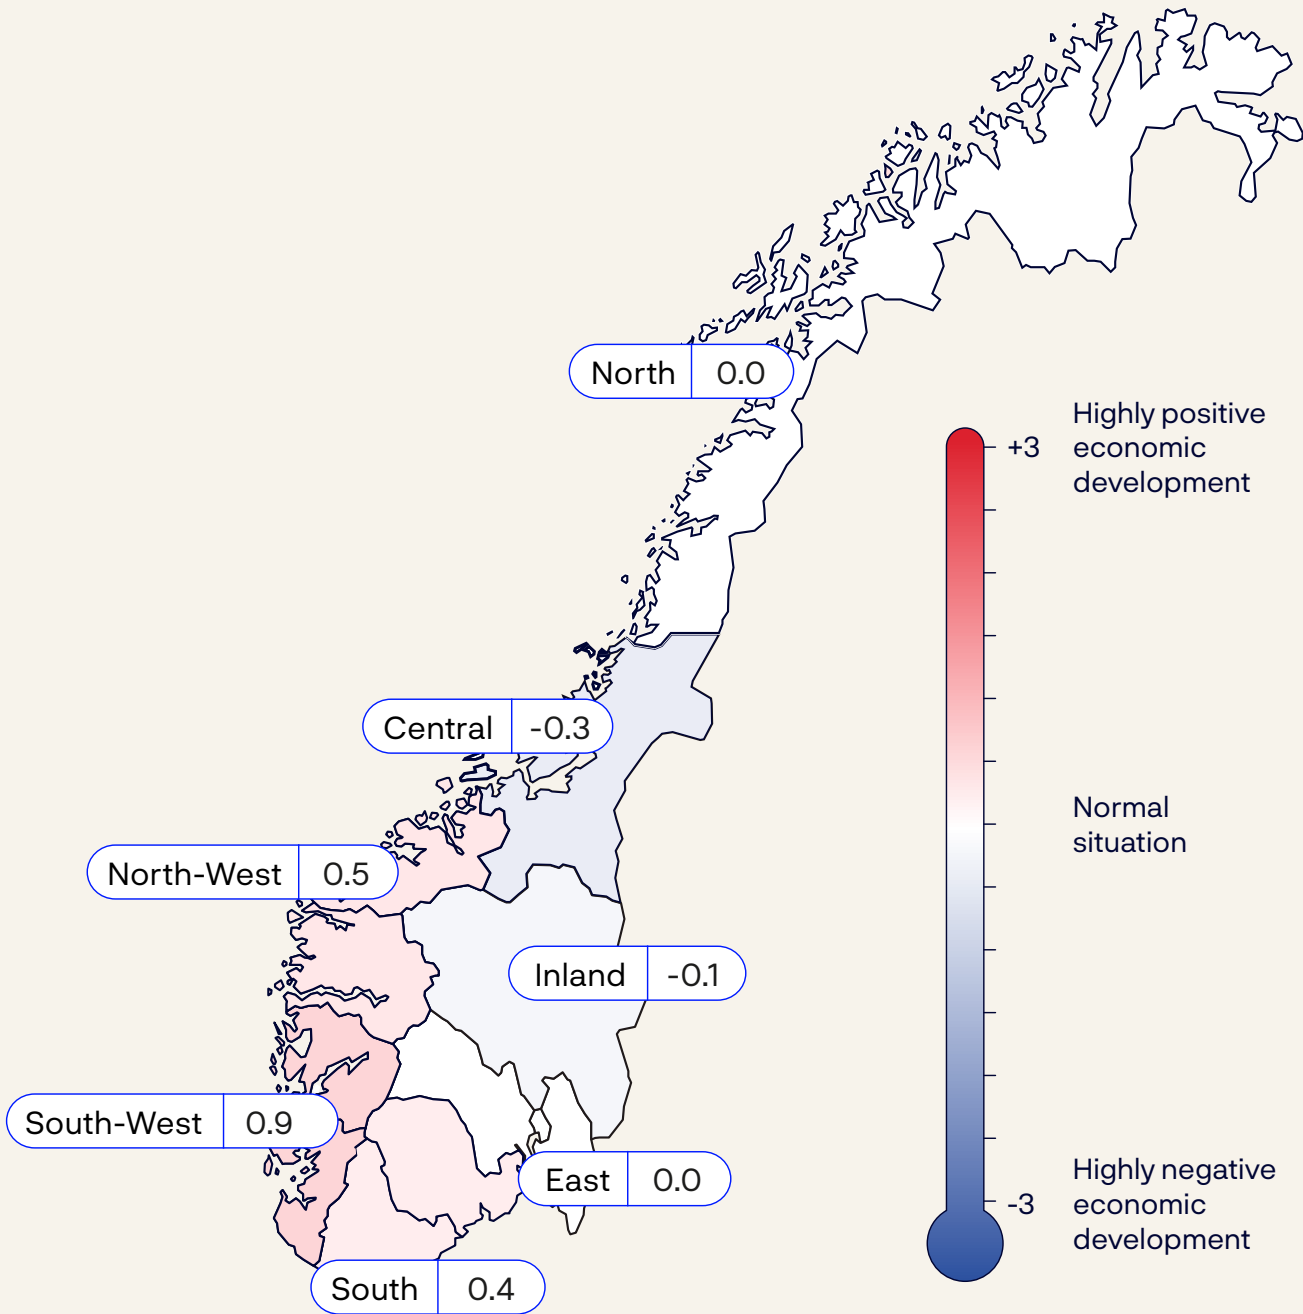

Overall, profitability among contacts has improved compared with one year ago (Chart 7). Construction contacts as a whole report small changes in profitability since 2024. Contacts have reported declining margins in construction since the start of 2019, and many point out that profitability is weak. Among a number of contacts, despite lower activity, margins have not declined further owing to cost-cutting measures, such as reducing both permanent and contract personnel. In the other sectors, contacts report improved margins.

The economic situation is most robust in western Norway

Contacts are asked, on a scale between -3 and +3, how they would rate the economic situation of their enterprise in terms of demand, profitability and prospects. A value of zero indicates a normal situation. The regional indicator is an average of the responses in the individual region. In this survey, only the regions South, South-West and North-West report a positive indicator. High activity in the oil industry in particular is having positive spillover effects in the economy in these regions of Norway, and the economic situation is most robust in the region South-West. On the other hand, the indicators are negative in the regions Central and Inland. A majority of construction-related contacts are among those that pull down the regional indicators in these regions.
